Carl Gardner, Ray Malony : Light: Re-Interpreting Architecture (Transformations) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Light: Re-Interpreting Architecture (Transformations):

11 1/2 x 9 240 color illustrations US Distribution only architecture The Transformations series takes a look at architectural projects that center around existing buildings and other constructions that have been "transformed." This informative, entertaining guide delves into the subject of Light-be it natural or artificial-and how it is being used by architects, interior designers, and lighting designers to revitalize structures. Packed with individual case studies and hundreds of sophisticated photos, Light features a diverse array of projects from around the world, including examples from such renowned "lighting architects" as England's Jonathan Speirs, Germany's Ingo Maurer, and Japan's Motoko

Ishii.

About the Author Carl Gardner is the U.K. Chairman of The International Association of Lighting Designers. Ray Malony is the Editor of Lighting Equipment News.
